Course Description
The Course provides an introduction to the study of comparative administrative law. Administrative law is a typical national product, which governs the relationships between public authorities and citizens. Legal comparison across jurisdictions, however, reveals the existence of common problems and solutions; allows to better understand the differences between administrative law systems; shows potential benefit (and costs) deriving from imitations and transplants in government and regulation.

The Course consists of case law discussion, meant to encourage active students’ participation. Each case will be examined in the context of its specific jurisdiction and through comparative overview.

The Course’s goal is to improve the students’ understanding of different administrative law systems at national and supranational level and to strengthen their analytical tools in addressing common challenges to governmental and regulatory choices.

The Course is divided in four parts: Section I. The Transformations of Comparative Administrative Law. Delegation to Independent Agencies. Section II. Privatization and Contracting Out. Section III. Participation in Administrative Procedures. Section IV. Judicial Review, Fair Trial and Due Process.
